journalist despite widespread backlash from her counterparts, may see her colourful literary legacy championed on the face

Born in 1863 in L'Isle-Verte.

Qué., about 200 kilometres northeast of Québec City, Barry developed keen writing senses at a young age. The ninth of 13 children, she enjoyed a privileged upbringing with "a wealth of books and music," ac-

RCM launches fundraising

mental health medal

Bu Jesse Robitaille

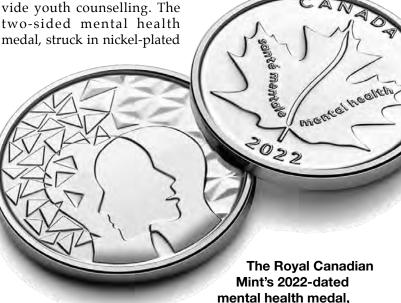

Recognizing the COVID-19 pandemic has taken a heavy toll on Canadians' mental health, the Royal Canadian Mint has struck a new fundraising medal following in the footsteps of last year's successful recognition medal.

Like the roughly $750,000 donated to the Breakfast Club of Canada from the sale of the recognition medal, all net proceeds from the sale of the new mental health medal will go directly to Kids Help Phone, a charitable organization launched in 1989 to provide youth counselling. The two-sided mental health medal struck in nickel-plated steel, went on sale for $9.95 (with free shipping) on Nov. 23.

"When Canadians embraced our recognition medal as a thank you to our pandemic heroes in 2020, it showed us how much they appreciated having a way to give back to their community at the height of the pandemic," said Mintmaster Marie Lemay, the Mint's president and CEO for nearly three years. "This encouraged Mint employees to develop and produce a new medal, which can struck in 6.04 grams of nickelplated steel, went on sale this November. All net proceeds from the medal's sale will go towards Kids Help Phone.

Robertine Barry opened doors for female journalists

By Jesse Robitaille
This is the fourth story in a multi-part series highlighting the shortlist of nominees for Canada's new $5 banknote.

An early 20th-century photograph of Robertine Barry is published in the 1903 book, Types of Canadian Women and of Women who are Or Have Been Connected with Canada.

"Unlike many children at the time, she received the best education available despite frequent visits to the Mother Superior for bad behaviour," wrote Forster, who added Barry "loved to learn but felt stifled in the strict convent schools she attended."

An interest in journalism followed her schooling with the Convent of Jesus and Mary in Trois-Pistoles, Qué., and then the Ursulines, a Roman Catholic female religious order, in Québec City. In the last two years of her studies, she wrote six pieces for her school newspaper L'Écho du cloître (The Cloister Echo in English, referencing the ornate covered walkways in convents, monasteries and cathedrals). Upon graduating in 1882, she was "thrilled to regain her freedom," according to Forster, and eager to pursue a career in the male-dominated profession of journalism.

EDITORIAL POLICY: Canadian Coin News is a hobby magazine endeavouring to bring worldwide numismatic news and views to its readers with the major emphasis on Canadian numismatics. Opinions expressed in signed columns, stories, and letters are not necessarily those of Canadian Coin News.

Auction and sales reports: CCN staff or assigned contributors write pre- and post-sale articles. Writers conduct interviews as needed and use information provided by the auction house as source material. As with all news articles, story selection, which sales to cover, and final placement in the magazine are news decisions made by the editor(s). Statements regarding sales are verified against prices realized. Lots that fail to meet reserve, or are bought by the consignor or their agent, are considered nonsales for the purpose of reporting. From time to time, CCN staff may request a copy of the invoice covering the auction transaction. Due to the public nature of auction transactions, this should not be needed often, but will be required in private treaty sales. Any information other than the price will be kept in confidence.

Attributions and values: Items attributed or values in CCN editorial content are offered as a service to our readers. In no way should they be construed to be an endorsement or official opinion on a specific Item. Readers looking for definitive answers should seek the services of a professional numismatist. While we strive for accuracy, errors or mistakes can occur. As a matter of policy such errors or mistakes, when discovered, will be corrected in the next available edition.

RCM's new strategy successful

The Royal Canadian Mint has found early success with its new corporate strategy, according to the Crown corporation's third-quarter (Q3) 2021 report.

"The Mint continues to demonstrate that its business strategy and operations are aligning well with the needs of its customers and building a strong foundation for the future," said Mintmaster Marie Lemay, who has served as the Mint's president and CEO since 2018. "The work of our teams in implementing our customer-centric strategy and delivering operational efficiencies with a clear focus on our precious metal and circulation businesses has been instrumental to our healthy results."

The Mint's profit before income tax and other items for the 13 and 39 weeks ended Oct. 2 increased $8.3 million and $51.2 million, respectively, compared to the same periods in 2020.

				13 weeks	ended				39	weeks e	nded

Total revenue	$	811.6	$	795.4	16.2	2	$	2,667.9	$	1,823.3	844.6	46

The Q3 report shows "tangible results of the success of the new strategy and the impact of returning to full production capacity compared to modified production in the first 26 weeks of 2020 due to the pandemic," according to a statement issued by the Mint in November. The quarterly profit increase was primarily driven by higher revenue from the foreign circulation business, which jumped 139 per cent in Q3 due to higher volumes. The Mint also reported a 46 per cent revenue increase year to date in its precious metal businesses owing to the continued global market demand for gold and silver bullion products and the "increased focus" on gold numismatic products. Reader R. Jung writes: "Hi there. I'm interested in knowing the value of a 'doubled die' beaver nickel dated 1963. How many are in circulation, and how rare are they?"

Canada's 1963 five-cent coin is known with several minor varieties, including die cracks, die clashes, die chips and doubled dies, the latter of which occurs when a coin's design elements are doubled due to a misaligned die and hub. In the minting process, the die holds the incuse design while the hob holds the raised design. Before 1980, the impression of a die required up to five hubbings (the metalworking process of creating a die) to entirely transfer the design, according to Ontario collector Patrick Glassford on his Canadian Error Coins website, coinscan.com. Also known as hub doubling, these minting mis-alignments can be lateral, rotated or pivotal, Glassford added. As for the 1963 five-cent piece, it has a reported mintage of 43.97 million coins; however, it's unknown how many examples were struck with doubled dies. "In 1963, some strikings of the five-cent > coin will have a double effect on the beaver's head as > > well as along the back," said Todd Sandham, the co-owner of Kitchener, Ont.'s Colonial Acres. "The 'K' in the 'K.G.' of the coin designer's initials may be doubled along with the letters found in the word 'CENTS."

CLARIFICATION ON RCNA'S 'ROYAL' TITLE REQUEST

Editor,

I read the article "RCNA seeks royal patronage to continue using 'Royal' title" in the latest issue (V59N18) of Canadian Coin News with intrigue. As President of the Royal Canadian Numismatic Association (RCNA), it is always a pleasure to see the organization featured in the news media.

In the piece, the writer has conflated two distinct activities, i.e., the granting of the title "Royal" and the granting of Viceregal patronage. While both honours are requested through the Office of the Governor General in Canada, the two are separate and exclusive, with the former granted by the Sovereign, and the latter by the Governor General.

Each Governor General of Canada, after assuming their duties, decides which groups and organizations are worthy of patronage by their Viceregal office. Our Association has been privileged to receive the patronage of each Governor General since Her Excellency the Right Honourable Michaëlle Jean in November of 2006. The RC-NA's patronage request to Her Excellency the Right Honourable Mary Simon has been submitted to Rideau Hall and is currently pending. We expect a formal response soon.

The RCNA, then the Canadian Numismatic Association, was granted the title "Royal" by Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth the Second on Sept. 12, 2007. Many of your readers may recall this was announced at the annual convention held in Ottawa in July 2008. The RCNA is proud of this prestigious honour and continually strives to maintain the high standards demanded of it.

Readers seeking further information on the topic may consult the following online references: www.gg.ca/en/contact-us/viceregal-patronage, and https://www.canada.ca/en/canadianheritage/services/royal-symbols-titles/royal-patronage-title-royal.html.

Thank you for the opportunity to provide this clarification.

VANCOUVER CLUB LAUNCHES CLOTHING DRIVE

The North Shore Numismatic Society (NSNS) has revived its annual "Helping the Homeless" clothing drive, which the Vancouver-based club was forced to suspend last year due to COVID-19. "Because conditions have improved this year, your club is again collecting winter clothing to assist the homeless," said NSNS President Michael Souza. "If you have any clean winter clothing that you no longer use, please consider donating them to our cause to assist some of the less fortunate in our society. In particular, we especially need gloves, toques, jackets, sweaters, sweatshirts and blankets." NSNS past president Lynn Balmer's son, a firefighter, has headed this initiative since 2018. Vancouver-area residents who have any clothing to donate are urged to contact Balmer at balmoralnu@shaw.ca. Balmer will arrange to pick up the clothing. "Thank you for your anticipated generosity," Souza added.

ONA AWARD NOMINATIONS NOW OPEN

The Ontario Numismatic Association (ONA) has begun accepting nominations for its two annual honours, the Award of Merit and the Fellow of the ONA. The awards, whose nomination deadline is Feb. 28, recognize "numismatists who have made contributions towards the advancement of numismatics, either throughout Ontario or at the local club level," according to ONA awards committee chair Scott Douglas. ONA members are now invited to nominate recipients, who also must be members of the provincial organization, with "a full summary of the nominees' numismatic achievements and contributions ...," Douglas added. The recipients, to be unveiled during a banquet at the annual ONA Convention, will receive an engraved silver medal, an inscribed certificate, an engraved metallic name badge and a complimentary seat at the banquet. "Nominees should be well rounded in all phases of numismatics," said Douglas, who added the nominations should highlight local coin club work, numismatic community work, numismatic education, regional numismatic involvement and any past awards or honours. The awards committee, which includes four past Award of Merit recipients plus the ONA president, will choose the winners from the submitted nominees. One Award of Merit and up to three Fellow of the ONA recipients will be chosen. Full details are provided in the Ontario Numismatist, the ONA's bimonthly journal.

CORRECTION: RCNA OFFICER

In the previous issue of CCN ("RCNA seeks royal patronage to continue using 'Royal' title," Vol. 59 #18), CCN mistakenly identified Cassidy Stroud, of Egbert, Ont., as the Royal Canadian Numismatic Association's new Rideau Hall liaison officer. In fact, Doug Andrews, of Winnipeg, remains in the Rideau Hall liaison role. We apologize for the error.

ROYAL MINT ISSUES 2022 SOVEREIGN

The Royal Mint has unveiled its 2022-dated sovereign featuring a rare design change in celebration of Queen Elizabeth II's platinum jubilee, the 70th anniversary of her accession to the throne. To mark Britain's longest-serving monarch, the 2022 sovereign features a new interpretation of the royal coat of arms created by calligrapher and coin and medal designer Timothy Noad, who previously designed the coin in 2002 and 2005. Known for its depiction of Italian engraver Benedetto Pistrucci's "St. George and the Dragon," the sovereign is one of the U.K. mint's "flagship coins and has celebrated royal achievements throughout the centuries," according to Clare Maclennan, the mint's divisional director of commemorative coin. "As such, it was fitting to include the royal coat of arms on the 2022 coin - celebrating Britain's longest-serving monarch with an original design." Changes to the design are reserved for "special moments," including the 50th and 60th anniversaries of the queen's accession to the throne, according to another statement issued by the mint. The sovereign's history dates back to 1489, when King Henry VII ordered a "new money of gold" to symbolize the Tudor dynasty's might.

COINS & HISTORY AT NICKLE GALLERIES

Dr. Robert Weir, a faculty member with the University of Windsor's languages, literatures and cultures department, was the latest virtual guest at the Nickle Galleries, a museum and art gallery housed at the University of Calgary. During a Nov. 18 Zoom presentation, Weir highlighted his methodology for identifying coins found in excavations. The coins - typically heavily corroded bronzes - can be used to interpret history, especially when found in hoards. While showing examples of coins from some of the sites where he previously worked, Weir also shared some of his interpretations. Weir earned a bachelor's degree with honours in Classics from the University of British Columbia in 1990 and a master's degree and PhD in Classical Archaeology from Princeton University in 1993 and 1998, respectively. He has been with the University of Windsor's languages, literatures and cultures department since 2002, and his research has mainly focused on the study and interpretation of coin hoards from excavations in Greece (Mytilene, Stymphalos, Kenchreai and Helike) and Cyprus (Polis Chrysochous). He also hopes to explore Turkey (Anamur). In addition to his work with coins, Weir also reconstructs the provenances of 16th-to-18th-century books from their marginalia (margin marks) and ownership marks. The Nickle Galleries also played host to a banquet during the 2019 Royal Canadian Numismatic Association Convention in Calgary, Alta.

Amodern city on the south coast of the Black Sea, Sinop is the capital of the Turkish province of the same name. In ancient times the polis – city state – was called Sinope. When the Greeks began to branch out from their homeland and establish colonies around the Mediterranean, the Milesians led the way in the colonization of the Pontus, a region on the southeastern shore of the Black Sea. The city of Sinope was founded by colonists from Mile-

It is thought that the city may have been named after the mythological nymph Sinope, who was a daughter of the river-god Asopus. According to one tradition, she was abducted to the site of the future city by the god Zeus, but she managed to outwit his carnal desire and preserve her virginity. She later outmanoeuvred two other gods in a similar way.

In a show of Athenian might, the statesman Pericles sailed to the Pontus with an impressive fleet of ships circa 436 BC. As a result of his visit to Sinope, the Athenians gained a foothold in the city.

The expansion of the First Persian Empire in the fourth century BC upset the city's control over its colonies to the east. Circa 375 BC, Datames, the Persian satrap – or governor – took over Sinope for a short time. Later the city maintained its independence despite the ambitions of Alexander the Great and other rulers until 183 BC, when it was captured and absorbed by the kingdom of Pontus. It became the kingdom's capital city.

In the year 70 BC, the Roman general Lucullus conquered Sinope, which was absorbed into the Roman Republic's growing dominions. In 47 BC, the site gained the status of a Roman colony under the name of Colonia Julia Felix.

Sinope was the birthplace and residence of Rome's ardent foe Mithridates VI Eupator, king of Pontus, who is buried there. It is also the birthplace of Cynic philosopher Diogenes – who later moved to Athens – as well as some other notable figures. With the division of the Roman Empire into eastern and western divisions in AD 395, Sinope became part of the eastern half, the Byzantine Empire.

The earliest coins attributed to Sinope are crude silver drachms depicting on the obverse the head of a sea eagle with a dolphin beneath. The reverse is comprised of two incuse squares, each containing a dot.

These were succeeded by the best known of the silver coins of Sinope, those of the fourth century BC bearing a representation of an eagle with wings extended in flight and holding a dolphin in its talons, with an abbreviation of the city name in Greek. The obverse usually consists of the head of a nymph, commonly identified as the nymph Sinope.

Later types include other designs. For example, a silver stater of the third century BC shows a turreted head of the goddess Tyche facing right on its obverse. The reverse depicts the god Apollo seated on a sacred stone called the omphalos at Delphi, and holding a lyre.

Common designs on silver hemidrachms – half-drachms – of the period from 306 to 290 BC are a turreted female head facing left on the obverse and a ship's prow on the reverse.

These are a few of the more common silver coin types of Sinope, though there are other designs. But let's not forget the city's base-metal coinage, which was quite varied in the late second and early first century BC, most or all of which may date from the time of Mithridates VI Eupator, who ruled the kingdom of Pontus from 120 to 63 BCE

A 22-millimetre bronze coin of the period 120 to 100 BCE shows on its obverse a young male head with small ears above, possibly intended to represent the god Hermes. The reverse carries the city name, and the caps of the Dioscuri with stars above and cornucopia between them.

There is a 20-mm diameter coin attributed to the time of Mithridates VI Eupator with an obverse type of a gorgon in the centre of a shield and a reverse showing Nike (Victory) walking while holding a wreath and a branch of a palm tree.

Another 20-mm issue of the same ruler shows a young head of the Greek war god Ares wearing a helmet and facing right on its obverse. The reverse depicts a sword in a sheath.

A 31-mm bronze coin depicts the helmeted head of the goddess Athena facing right on its obverse. The reverse portrays the hero Perseus standing and holding a harpa, an ancient form of musical instrument in the shape of a denticulated sickle, which was sometimes used as a weapon in mythology; in some accounts Perseus is said to have used it to cut off the head of the gorgon Medusa. In his other hand he holds Medusa's severed head. Her body lies at his feet. The city name appears in Greek in the field at the right and left of Perseus.

A number of Roman provincial coins are also attributed to Sinope under several imperial personages, such as Augustus, Caligula, Claudius, Titus, Domitian, Hadrian, Antoninus Pius, Marcus Aurelius, Geta, Diadumenian, Maximinus I Thrax, his son Maximus, Gordian III, Trajan Decius, and Gallienus. However that may be material for a future column.

New Brunswick-BMO mule's origin worth researching

By Tim Grawey

The Bank of Montreal offers some intriguing mules: tokens struck from dies not intended to be used together.

One such example is the 1837/1842 City Bank/Bank of Montreal One Penny listed as 88BM by Eugene Courteau in his 1919 monologue The Copper Tokens of the Bank of Montreal. It is also found as No. 111 in the 1886 book A Descriptive Catalogue of Coins, Tokens and Medals Issued in or Relating to the Dominion of Canada and Newfoundland by R.W. McLachlan.

Its obverse displays a front view of the Bank of Montreal building with railings on both sides and trees behind, along with the caption "PROVINCE OF CANADA BANK OF MONTREAL" around the border. Its reverse illustrates the arms of the City of Montreal quartered by St. Andrew's Cross. What makes this token unique is a scroll extending to the left and right inscribed CITY BANK and dated 1837.

The die used for the obverse is from the Bank of Montreal Province of Canada 1842 Front View penny (Breton No. 526) and the reverse die is from the City Bank 1837 Habitant penny (Breton No. 521). While dated 1837, the union of Upper and Lower Canada forming the Province of Canada did not occur until 1841. These dies were definitely not intended to be used together.

The Montreal Bank, established in 1817, became incorporated as the Bank of Montreal in 1822. The bank issued several pre-Confederation tokens, including the Un Sous (Breton No. 713) around 1835, the 1837 Habitat tokens in partnership with the Quebec Bank, City Bank, and Banque du Peuple as well as the 1838 and 1839 Side View tokens and finally the 1842 and 1844 Front View tokens.

ONLY MCLACHLAN LISTS THE HALFPENNY MULE

McLachlan lists another mule as No. 122, but the token's existence is debatable. Its obverse portrays a diademed head of Victoria to the left along with the expression "VICTORIA DEI GRATIA REGINA" around the border and the date of 1843 below the bust. This is from the obverse of a New Brunswick 1843 halfpenny token (Breton No. 910). McLachlan advises that the reverse is the same die as used for his No. 118, an 1842 Bank of Montreal halfpenny (Breton No. 527) that illustrates the front view of the Bank of Montreal building with a railing on both sides and trees behind with the inscription "PROVINCE OF CANADA BANK OF MONTREAL" around the border. Once again, this clearly shows that two dies not intended to be used together were somehow mated to form a rare and unique to-

An April Heritage Auctions sale featured a one-penny mule of the New Brunswick and Bank of Montreal tokens, only the second example the auction house has seen. A similar halfpenny mule was not auctioned since 19th-century numismatist R.W. McLachlan reported an example on an auction block in New York. Photo courtesy of Heritage Auctions.

The New Brunswick 1843 tokens came with their own controversy. While proposed by the Province of New Brunswick, they were not approved by Britain and entered circulation amid confusing circumstances. This is perplexing because the Boulton and Watt Mint, where they were struck, routinely demanded strict confirmation of token orders from the provincial or home government.

The 1843 New Brunswick halfpenny and the 1842 Bank of Montreal were both struck by the Boulton and Watt Soho manufactory, within two years of each other.

In "Canadian Colonial Tokens Struck by Boulton & Watt 1838-1845," an article in the May 1982 Canadian Numismatic Journal, Peter Russell documents records from Boulton and Watt.

On Aug. 25, 1842, the Bank of Montreal ordered 14 tons of pennies and halfpennies through its agent Albert Furniss at a cost of just over £2,062, which amounted to 381,720 pennies and 763,440 halfpennies. On March 4, 1843, fourteen tons of New Brunswick tokens at a cost of £1,737 were ordered through agent Tarrat and Co. This consisted of 496,200 pennies and 686,440 halfpennies. On March 13, 1843, an additional £50 was ordered through a Capt. Dudne consisting of 11,648 pennies and 23,296 halfpennies.

A lack of information regarding who authorized the 1843 New Brunswick token has led to speculation that the tokens may have been smuggled out of Britain for a hefty profit. It has also been surmised that the lack of verification of who authorized these tokens was an example of colonial defiance toward imperial rule and the march toward responsible government.

AN EXPLANATION

McLachlan offers an explanation of how these dies were muled.

"The whole series of Bank Tokens were struck by Mssrs, Bolton and Watt, of Soho Mint, Birmingham, as also were the New Brunswick tokens of 1843. There must have been some tampering with the dies, as mules of this description would not under ordinary circumstances have got into circulation. The spec-

This seems logical, considering the token's existence is questionable. It is not listed by other numismatists, including Courteau, and an online search proved fruitless.

An April 18 Heritage Auctions sale featured Doug Robins' collection of Canadian tokens. Lot No. 98329 offered a one-penny mule of the New Brunswick and Bank of Montreal tokens (Breton Nos. 909 and 526) graded AU Brown by NGC, only the second example that the major auction house has seen. The provenance summary is the McKay-Clements collection (Frank K. Rose, May 1976, lot No. 54), from the Donald G. Patrick collection. This token realized US$4,320 ($5,500) including the buyer's premium. However, this example is of a one-penny mule rather than a halfpenny mule.

The auction summary alludes to how this piece may have been created, indicating it may be linked to the activities of William Joseph Taylor, a British entrepreneur involved in the manufacture of coins and tokens. After the Boulton and Watt Mint closed in 1848, Taylor purchased many of its hubs and dies two years later. He used these hubs and dies to re-strike many coins and tokens that Boulton and Watt had struck from the 1790s to the 1840s. In late 1851, he re-located his operation to Australia.

So does the halfpenny mule actually exist and if so, was it struck by Boulton and Watt or by Taylor? McLachlan pointed out that the piece appeared in a New York auction, so it must exist, likely hidden away in some collection. In my opinion, the balance of probabilities would be that Taylor struck this mule along with others.

Edward VIII sovereign pattern tops $3M, sets new record for British coin at auction

By Jesse Robitaille

All realizations include buyer's premium.

A rare Edward VIII £5 sovereign pattern has realized €2.11 million (about $3 million Cdn.), setting a new record for the most expensive British coin sold at auction.

Certified as Proof-67 "Ultra Cameo" by Numismatic Guaranty Corp. (NGC), the coin was the top-selling lot in MDC Monaco's Oct. 20-21 sale, where it crossed the block as Lot 1050. It's one of only two known privately owned examples; however, other specimens are held by the Royal Collection, the Royal Mint Museum and the British Museum.

"I am proud that once again a coin certified by NGC has achieved a new world record," said Ben Wengel, the Floridabased firm's senior grading finalizer for world coin.

The largest denomination from the fabled 1937 "abdication set," the £5 sovereign pattern is one of four trial strikes planned by the Royal Mint a year earlier, when Edward ascended the throne. While £2 and £1 patterns were also struck, the planned half-sovereign denomination was never minted.

The previous monarch, King George V, died on Jan. 20, 1936, after several bouts of illness and five days bedridden at Sandringham House, one of several royal residences. He was administered lethal injections of morphine and cocaine by Bertrand Dawson, the royal family physician, who wished to preserve the king's dignity and supported the "gentle growth of euthanasia," according to a 1986 story by the New York Times.

Soon after the death of his father, Edward VIII ascended the throne to start his reign as king. A non-traditionalist, he frequently broke customs, the most glaring of which caused a constitutional crisis and an eventual abdication.

On Dec. 11, 1936, Edward VIII abdicated the throne after a reign of only 326 days to marry U.S. divorcee Wallis Warfield Simpson, who he called "the woman I love."

"You all know the reasons which have impelled me to renounce the throne. But I want you to understand that in making up my mind I did not forget the country or the empire, which, as Prince of Wales and lately as king, I have for 25 years tried to serve," Edward said in his abdication speech on Dec. 11, 1936. "But you must believe me when I tell you that I have found it impossible to carry the heavy burden of responsibility and to discharge my duties as King as I would wish to do without the help and support of the woman I love."

The only British sovereign ever to resign the crown voluntarily, Edward then became the Duke of Windsor. His estate was managed by Toronto financier Sir Edward Peacock until his death in Paris, France, on May 28, 1972

The next in line was George VI, who reigned from Dec. 11, 1936, until his death on Feb. 6, 1952, when the current monarch – Queen Elizabeth II – ascended to the throne.

Royal Mint reports from 1935-36 suggest more than 200 dies for coins, medals and seals were produced before Edward's abdication, but most of this material was destroyed by the mint. The production of the 1937 sovereign set was cancelled, and no coins bearing his portrait entered circulation in the United Kingdom; however, the mint kept some patterns in its archives.

While Edward asked for a set of the cancelled coins, King

George VI – his brother – refused his request because the unissued coins were deemed unofficial, according to a 2016 BBC report.

The coins coins "were never meant to exist and were hidden from the public for decades," said Matt Curtis, of the Royal Mint Collector Services.

For many years after their production, the 1937 sovereign specimens "were locked away and not treated as part of the museum collection," according to Graham Dyer, the Royal Mint Museum's senior research curator and author of the 1973 book, The Proposed Coinage of King Edward VIII.

"There was such an air of mystery about the coinage of Edward VIII," Dyer told the BBC in 2016. "The Royal Mint had actually made all the preparations to start production of the new coins on Jan. 1, 1937, and geared up to strike the first coins at 8 a.m. on that day."

Few people knew what survived, Dyer added, and the coins' existence was "something of a mystery even within the Royal Mint."

That all changed with the 1970 retirement of Sir Jack James, the deputy mintmaster for more than a decade, as a sealed cardboard box was retrieved from a safe in his office. Within the box were 49 coins, including uniface patterns not originally associated with Edward VIII.

Aside from his love life, Edward's proposed effigy also broke with tradition.

"From the time of Charles II onwards, a tradition developed of monarchs being represented on the coinage facing in the opposite direction to their immediate predecessor," reads the royal family's website. "The exception to this was in the brief reign of Edward VIII. He liked portraits of himself facing to the left, even though, according to tradition, he should have faced to the right. Designs for proposed coins for his reign show Edward VIII facing to the left."

Edward insisted his effigy face left – like his father – to show the parting in his hair, according to Allan Michie's 1952 book, God Save the Queen.

The nearly 300-year-old tradition was restored during the reign of George VI, whose portrait faces left "as if Edward VIII's had faced right," Michie wrote.

Traditionally, each monarch faces the opposite way to his or her predecessor whenever new currency is produced; however, King Edward VIII insisted on facing the same way as his father, King George V, because he preferred his left profile. Photo by the Royal Mint.

The £5 sovereign offered this October previously realized a record price of $2.28 million US at a Heritage Auctions sale in March

The only other privately owned example forms part of the Tyrant Collection's proof set. The private U.S. collection, whose owner wishes to remain anonymous, includes every denomination issued by English monarchs since the early seventh century.

RON GREENE SPEAKS AT IBNS CHAPTER MEETING

The Vancouver chapter of the International Bank Note Society (IBNS) hosted its latest meeting in November as the notaphilic fraternity continued to gain steam since its revival this January.

On Nov. 23, the chapter's members met for their sixth meeting of 2021 as guest speaker Ron Greene presented on Macdonald & Co. Bankers, a private bank opened in Victoria, B.C., in 1859 and closed following a robbery just half a decade later. Greene, a banknote expert who's a past president of the Canadian Paper Money Society and a Fellow of the Canadian Numismatic Research Society, highlighted relevant banknotes, the conditions of their issue and the personalities involved with the bank. The bank's issues are the only colonial-era notes that are not nearly impossible to obtain, Greene said.

Founded in 1961, the IBNS is an international club serving collectors and researchers of worldwide banknotes with nearly 30 chapters. *

Barry...

"I am not among those who consider marriage as the goal to which must be devoted a lifetime of noble efforts," Barry is quoted as saying the article, "Robertine Barry: la rebelle," in La Gazette des femmes, a feminist magazine.

After her fiancé showed a lack of support toward her literary goals, Barry called off her engagement plans and began pitching stories to several publishers, wrote Sergine Desjardins, an award-winning author who received the Jovette Bernier Prize for her 2010 biography, Robertine Barry: On l'appelait Monsieur.

The year Barry graduated, the Globe (now the Globe & Mail) became the first newspaper to include a women's page with a section edited by Kathleen Coleman, an Irish-born writer living in Hamilton, Ont. Coleman was the first female journalist in Canada charged with managing her own section of a newspaper. At about the same time, other newspapers, including the Montréal Herald, began publishing content directed towards women.

As Barry pitched stories through the 1880s and early 1890s, she was determined to join the ranks of Canada's few female journalists but mostly encountered rejection.

"While awaiting a more favourable response from other publishers, she suggested to her sister Évelyne that they write a novel together, but Évelyne chose to become a nun instead," Desjardins wrote for the Canadian Encyclopedia. "Robertine, on her parents' advice, began teaching music at a convent in Halifax to see whether she wanted to enter holy orders too. But that proved not to be the case, and she returned to Trois-Pistoles."

Inspired by early French journalist Caroline Rémy de Guebhard (known by her literary pseudonym Séverine), Barry persevered through many years of repeated attempts to convince an editor to publish her stories.

Finally, on April 30, 1891 - nine years after graduating - her first published piece highlighted the importance of education for young women on the cover of La Patrie, a radical newspaper edited by Honoré Beaugrand in Montréal. Writing under her literary pseudonym Françoise, she suggested radical education reforms to remove the Catholic Church's control for schools. In both her writing and perseverance, she "showed remarkable courage as her first major piece challenged the majority of Quebec's popular, including the powerful clergy, ultramontanes and anti-feminists," Forster wrote in her 2011 book.

La Patrie published another three articles on women's education from "Françoise," who served as a regular staff member until 1900, writing a weekly column, "Chronique du lundi" ("Monday Chronicle"). In it, she provided her distinct voice to "all the major issues of the day," Desjardins wrote for the Canadian Encyclopedia. In addition to promoting non-confessional education and the creation of a provincial public education ministry, Barry often wrote about women's suffrage; social justice; shelters for the poor, elderly and female victims of violence; child labour legislation; and public libraries. She also "demanded what no French-Canadian woman had ever demanded publicly before," Desjardins added, by pressuring officials to allow women to attend universities and practice the same professions as men.

Not everyone was impressed with Barry's early work.

Unabashed anti-feminist Henri Bourassa – then the mayor of Montebello, Qué., soon to be an MP and the founder and editor of another newspaper, Le Devoir, in 1910 – called Barry a monster for living her life in the public eye, according to Desjardins.

"He used to say during his lectures that women who defended ideas like Robertine's should be beaten," Desjardins added.

In 1913, in response to suffragist campaigns across the country, Bourassa authored and published a series of antifeminist articles in Le Devoir. He followed it up with another series of "virulent articles against feminism" in 1918, after Canadian women were granted the vote, according to historian Micheline Dumont's 2009 article in Le Devoir, which continues to be independently published.

Even a decade after Barry's groundbreaking cover story for La Patrie, Canada's 1901 census listed fewer than 60 women identifying as journalists

In 1902, to introduce more female voices to Ouébec's media landscape, Barry began publishing Le Journal de Françoise, a bimonthly magazine that ran until 1909, spurring several prominent journalists both women and men – to begin their own careers. She also published two books – an 1895 collection of short stories, Fleurs champêtres, plus another collection of 87 of her La Patrie articles, Chroniques du lundi, in 1900 – while writing for more than a dozen Montréal publications.

Barry also held a weekly salon, where she hosted "bohemians and free thinkers," added Desjardins in the Canadian Encyclopedia.

"A fascinating woman, Barry defied convention: she rode a bicycle, walked alone through the streets at night, and travelled without an escort (all considered scandalous behaviours for a woman at that time) and defended controversial positions, such as the joys of celibacy. Over the years, she became more and more highly regarded for her talent as a journalist."

In 1904, with 15 other female journalists from Canada, Barry co-founded the Canadian Women's Press Club, of which she was elected vice-president. She also served as the president of the Association of French-Canadian Women Journalists.

Le Journal de Françoise, a bimonthly publication Barry launched in 1902, featured female-focused literary reviews authored by leading Québec writers.

In 1910, after suffering from depression while serving as the inspector of women's working conditions in Québec factories, Barry took a brief doctor-recommended trip to Paris. Later that year, just a few months after her return to Montréal, she died of a stroke.

"She was only 46, but she had lived a full life," Desjardins wrote for the Canadian Encyclopedia.

While Barry is the namesake of a journalism prize, two streets in Québec and a township in Abitibi, Qué., Desjardins suggested the pioneering journalist's memory has largely been forgotten. She's buried in Montréal's Notre-Dame-des-Neiges cemetery, where her grave "is grass-covered and unmarked, with not even a small cross to show the final resting place of this pioneer of women's journalism," Desjardins added.

FACE OF THE $5 NOMINEES

The Bank of Canada launched its latest banknote series in 2018 with the release of a $10 bill honouring Black rights activist Viola Desmond.

The forthcoming $5 vertical note – the second in the as-of-yet-unnamed eighth series – is expected to begin circulating in 2022 or 2023.

In addition to Barry, the Bank of Canada's eight-person shortlist for the new face of the $5 bill includes:

- Pitseolak Ashoona, an acclaimed Inuk artist who produced nearly 9,000 drawings and other work throughout her prolific career ("Pitseolak Ashoona broke new ground for Inuit art, culture," CCN Vol. 59 #18);
- Binaaswi, also known by his English name Francis Pegahmagabow, a First World War veteran who was the most highly decorated Indigenous soldier in Canadian history;
- Won Alexander Cumyow, the first known Chinese-Canadian born in Canada ("$5 bill shortlist nominee 'really blazed a trail,'" CCN Vol. 59 #14)·
- Lotta Hitschmanova, a Czech-born refugee who came to Canada in 1942 before becoming one of the country's earliest grassroots humanitarians:
- Isapo-muxika, also known as Crowfoot, who was the leader of the Blackfoot Confederacy and a key figure in the Treaty 7 negotiations;
- Frederick Ogilvie Loft, also known by his Mohawk name Onondeyoh, who was a chief, First World War veteran, activist and founder of the first pan-Canadian Indigenous organization in 1918; and
- Terry Fox ("Terry Fox 'the top option' for new $5 banknote," CCN Vol. 59 #17). ❖ wrote a two-part biography on Barry in 2010. Part one was titled La femme nouvelle while part two was titled On l'appelait Monsieur.

Barry became a boarding student at the 'Couvent Jésus-Marie' (Convent of Jesus and Mary) after her family moved to Trois-Pistoles, Qué., in 1873.

Strong bidding tops expectations at Moncton Sale

By Jesse Robitaille

Realizations include buyer's premium.

Certified in Mint-State (MS) condition, a 1945 silver dollar featuring the "5 over 5" variety was the top-earning coin among nearly 580 lots in Geoffrey Bell Auctions' (GBA) latest Moncton Sale.

An annual late-year auction dating back to 2013, the Moncton Sale is held at the firm's headquarters in the city's downtown area just north of the Petitcodiac River. This year's single-session sale was held on Nov. 20 and marked the first GBA auction with live in-person bidding – albeit just for locals – since the COVID-19 pandemic began in March 2020.

Several of those bidders battled for the "5/5" silver dollar variety, which was certified by International Coin Certification Service (ICCS) as MS-60. It eventually sold for $1,100, nearly doubling its $575 estimate as Lot 218.

Canada's 1945 silver dollar has a mintage of 38,391 – slightly more than half of the sought-after 1948 silver dollar's 18,780 mintage. The former coin carries a CCN Trends valuation of $525 in MS-60, $650 in MS-62, $1,000 in MS-63, $2,500 in MS-64 and $15,000 in MS-65. Often missing from collectors' collection, this date enjoys high demand owing to its relatively low mintage.

A 1945 $1 '5 over 5' variety in Mint State-60 brought $1,100 at the Nov. 20 Moncton Sale hosted by Geoffrey Bell Auctions.

Among the exonumia, what auctioneers described as a "very scarce" brass "beaver preserve" token also topped its estimate in a group lot alongside an aluminum "made beaver" piece. Both Hudson's Bay Company (HBC) tokens, they brought $720 on a $400-$500 estimate as Lot 429.

The Beaver Preserve token dates to the mid-20th century, when James Watt, the post manager at Rupert House (first known as Charles Fort), the earliest HBC trading post, developed a system to remedy the rapidly declining beaver population in the local area (presentday Waskaganish, Qué.). After 1940, Indigenous trappers brought their beaver pelts to Rupert House, where the pelts were assigned a numbered token. After the furs were shipped south and auctioned in Québec, the trappers received payment via cheque.

The made beaver token featured a value, "100," referring to its role as a unit of account. Used as currency for many decades during the furtrade era, one "made beaver" equalled the value of the skin on 'an adult male beaver in prime condition," according to Dick Hanscom, of Fairbanks, Alaska, writing in the January 2019 issue of the Alaskan Token Collector and Polar Numismatist. The example offered this November was listed as #285d by late numismatist Larry Gingras, the founder of the Canadian Numismatic Research Society, in his 1975 book Medals, Tokens and Paper Money of the Hudson's Bay Company.

Paper money also sold to strong prices, with most of that material hitting or exceeding its estimates.

The top highlights include:
• a 1954 $5 note (Charlton BC-39a) in Gem Uncirculated-66 EPQ (exceptional paper quality) that brought $480, more than doubling its $150 estimate as

- an 1858 International Bank $1 note (Charlton 380-10-10-04a) in Extremely Fine-40, with large blue serial numbers and a Niagara Falls vignette, that brought $570, nearly doubling its $325 estimate as Lot 581;
- a 1971 $10 replacement note (Charlton BC-49cA-i) in Choice New-63 PPQ (premium paper quality) that brought $930, topping its $800 estimate as Lot 518;
- an HBC B.C. District $1 red cardboard token with black printing (Charlton 10-18-06R) that brought $750, topping its $600 estimate as Lot 558;
- a 1954 $5 "Devil's Face" note with the transitional prefix "I/C" (Charlton BC-31b) in Choice Uncirculated-62 that brought $690, topping its $575 estimate as Lot 472; and
- a 48-piece group lot of assorted scrip that brought $870, topping its $200 estimate by more than four times as Lot 569.

A pair of tokens, including a scarce brass 'beaver preserve' token and an aluminum 'made beaver' piece, realized $720 at the one-day sale in Moncton, N.B.

Focus on: Canadian large and small cents

Canadian Coin News Trends is an estimate of retail values of the items listed, based on dealer sales, wholesale prices, auction results and precious metal prices. It assumes that coins are free of damage, problem-free and correctly graded, and that the buyer and seller have equal knowledge and motivation. The estimates contained on these pages are meant as a guide only, since exact values are set by buyers and sellers in fair negotiation.

In this issue, we are focusing on Canadian one-cent coins. There are a number of changes this issue, but I wanted to report some sales results from the last few months, which will help highlight why certain changes have been made.

At Colonial Acres Coins' Fall Premiere Auction, held Sept. 10-11, there were a couple of notable sales of one-cent coins. An 1858 cent with coinage axis, graded F-12 by ICCS, realized $2,645, while a 1937 cent, ICCS-certified MS-66 Red, realized $1,052.

The Canadian Numismatic Company held its Prominence IV sale June 26-30. In the first session, a 1904 cent in ICCS MS-66 Red, formerly of the G.F. Landon collection, realized $2,937; a 1906 cent in ICCS MS-66 RED, also ex. Landon, sold for $5,581; a 1908 cent in PCGS MS-65 Red sold for $1,547; and a 1944 cent in ICCS MS-65 Red realized $4,760.

Anglo-Saxon hoard largest ever found in England

By Jesse Robitaille

Over almost 30 years, a metal detectorist unearthed nearly 130 gold coins from a field in Norfolk, England, in what was recently declared the largest hoard from the Anglo-Saxon period found in the U.K. country.

Between 1991 and 2020, the detectorist, who wishes to remain anonymous, sporadically found the coins and other objects while searching his land in Norfolk. The hoard is mostly comprised of Frankish tremisses (gold coins of Late Antiquity) dating from 580 AD-630 AD.

"The West Norfolk hoard is a really remarkable find, which will provide a fascinating counterpart to 'Sutton Hoo' at the other end of the kingdom of East Anglia," said Helen Geake, the finds liaison officer with the Norfolk Coroner's Service, referencing the site of two early medieval cemeteries recently dramatized in the Netflix movie The Dig.

The Sutton Hoo ship burial held more gold but fewer coins compared to the West Norfolk hoard, which is believed to be the largest coin hoard of the Anglo-Saxon period known to date.

Buried shortly after 600 AD, the West Norfolk hoard contains 131 gold coins, most of which are Frankish tremisses. It includes nine gold solidi, a larger coin from the Byzantine empire worth three tremisses, plus four other gold objects, including a bracteate (a type of stamped pendant), a small bar and two other pieces believed to be parts of larger jewellery.

When the hoard was buried, England was still divided into several smaller Anglo-Saxon kingdoms, the most important of which was East Angles, which included modern Norfolk and Suffolk. The region is also known for its metal-detected archaeological finds.

"It underlines the value of metal-detected evidence in helping reconstruct the earliest history of England but also shows how vulnerable these objects are to irresponsible collectors and the antiquities trade," added Geake.

HOARD REPORTED TO THE CORONER

The anonymous detectorist reported his findings to the Norfolk Coroner's Service, which has since opened an inquest to determine if the hoard constitutes treasure, which would make it crown property under the U.K. Treasure Act.

Any two or more coins that are more than 300 years old and contain more than 10 per cent precious metal are typically defined as treasure.

The crown will often claim a find if an accredited museum plans to acquire it for public benefit and pay a reward equivalent to its full market value.

For the West Norfolk hoard, the Norwich Castle Museum hopes to acquire the hoard with the support of the British Museum. ing of early trade and exchange systems and the importance of West Norfolk to East Anglia's ruling kings in the seventh century."

TREASURE ACT PECULIARITIES

Most Treasure Act cases are "relatively straightforward," according to a statement the British Museum issued in early November.

The West Norfolk case, however, is more unusual for several reasons. The majority of those objects were found from 2014-20 by the anonymous detectorist, who owns the land where the coins were found; however, 10 of the coins were found by a second detectorist, the 2014-20 finds from the anonymous detectorist plus the coins concealed by Cockle, who managed to sell two pieces before they could be recovered by the authorities.

PAST FINDS MADE HISTORY

The previous largest coin hoard of the Anglo-Saxon period was a purse containing 101 The most famous discovery from the Anglo-Saxon period was the Sutton Hoo ship burial, dating to between 610 AD and 640 AD. The burial included a purse of 37 gold coins, three blank gold discs (the same size as the coins), two small gold ingots and many other gold items. The purse contained only Frankish coins, reflecting the fact coins

An anonymous metal detectorist found nearly 130 gold coins and other gold objects on land that they own in Norfolk, England, over the past three decades.

"This is a hugely important find," said Gareth Williams, the British Museum's curator of early medieval coins. "It is close in date to the famous ship burial from Sutton Hoo in Suffolk, and although it doesn't contain as much gold as the whole of the Sutton Hoo burial, it contains many more coins. In fact, it is the largest coin hoard of the period known to date. It must be seen alongside other recent finds from East Anglia and elsewhere and will help to transform our understanding of the economy of early Anglo-Saxon England."

Tim Pestell, the senior curator of archaeology at the Norwich Castle Museum, echoed those comments about the West Norfolk hoard's importance.

"This internationally significant find reflects the wealth and continental connections enjoyed by the early Kingdom of East Anglia. Study of the hoard and its findspot has the potential to unlock our understand-

David Cockle, who had permission from the landowner to detect in the same field.

Cockle, a police officer, failed to report his discoveries and instead attempted to sell the coins, which he claimed were single finds from several different sites. After Cockle's deception was uncovered, he was found guilty of theft, sentenced to 16 months in prison and dismissed from the police service in 2017.

All of the West Norfolk objects were found in a single field, where a single gold coin was found as far back as 1990. Because the coin found in 1990 predated the Treasure Act, it's not included with the group currently being considered by the coroner.

"Despite this quirk, it seems almost certain that this was part of the same hoard," according to the British Museum statement.

Despite that claim, the ongoing treasure case includes both coins discovered in 1828 in Crondall, a village in Hampshire, England.

It had been disturbed before its discovery and may originally have included more coins, according to the British Museum. Buried in about 640 AD, the hoard contained a mixture of Anglo-Saxon, Frankish and Frisian coins along with a single Byzantine Empire coin minted in Constantinople.

The decades on either side of 600 AD were "quite literally a golden age for Anglo-Saxon England," the museum statement added. The largest find of gold metalwork from the period was the Staffordshire hoard discovered in 2009 by Terry Herbert. Dating from the mid-seventh century, it contained more than 5.1 kilograms of gold and 1.4 kilograms of silver. Though the Staffordshire hoard is currently the largest precious metal find from the period, it contained were not yet being minted in the area by the time of the burial (although imported coins were already used in East Anglia by this time).

Another important grave was discovered in 2003 at Prittlewell in Essex. It's believed to have been buried a few years before the Sutton Hoo ship and contained two gold coins plus other gold objects.

CANADIAN COMPARISON

In Canada, the ownership of archaeological finds is determined through similar legislation to the U.K. Treasure Act.

"Most provincial statutes treat archaeological discoveries as being of such significance that they deserve to belong in the public domain: they declare that archaeological finds will not belong to the landowner or the finder, but rather to the provincial Crown," reads the Parks Canada website.

Internet offers unending stream of phoney errors

By John Regitko

Will it ever end? That is the question I have for the owners of websites about the obvious phoney errors being touted as genuine mint errors, accompanied by trumped up descriptions, false statements about the uniqueness and value, and otherwise misleading information intended to extract money from buyers.

These website operators hide behind laws that allow them to turn a blind eye to what normal people recognize as illegal in any other setting.

For example, if you buy any product directly from a store, from a company's website or from an intermediary such as Amazon, Walmart or Costco, you take it back or send it back and you will get a refund, credit or replacement, no questions asked, because these businesses value their reputation and do not want to repeat the problem.

But when websites act only as a vehicle that brings buyers and sellers together, they develop a hands-off attitude, claiming that they are not responsible for what goes on through their site; they facilitate the transactions, but are not part of it.

If I operated such a website, I would not take the easy way

I would earn buyers' respect by setting up a department of experts in all popular fields on my website. They would monitor listings and remove those that contain knock-off products and phoney errors, just to name two types of deceptive product listings.

I would also concern myself with misleading statements that go beyond the usual simple puffing considered normal when it comes to advertising and promotion.

Any references to "No Returns" and similar comments that null and void any warranties and returns would be eliminated. Instead, I would include in the template of each listing that all sellers are obligated to live up to the terms and conditions posted on the site.

Any seller – regardless how any different pseudonyms they use – would be banned for repeated undesirable listings for a period of time.

The most popular site, eBay, has some standards. However, in my opinion, they don't go far enough. By refusing bad listings in the first place, the inconvenience for buyers in returning bad products and attempting to get their money back is eliminated.

You might argue that the axiom "buyer beware" comes into play: If you fall for the misinformation, it is on you! A more proactive stance would surely buy you peace of mind if you know a website has your interests in mind more than what I can say for existing sites.

In the meantime, this column will take sellers to task when I firmly believe that a listing is outright wrong. I will continue to back my opinion by stating what I believe a listing truly offers, based on my experience and many discussions over many years with experts at the Royal Canadian Mint.

If my opinion is contrary to what the seller says, I will continue to pay for certification by recognized third-party authentication companies and publish my mistake in this column. I have never had to reimburse anyone yet!

Following are a few more internet listings that I question and will reimburse the seller if my opinion turns out to be wrong.

PENNY BACK, SILVER 10-CENT COIN FRONT?

This listing, through the site "Hibid," closed on Nov. 2, 2021. The site states that the auctioneer was McLean Auctions of Lindsay, Ont.

The coin that was up for auction is a Canadian 1955 cent described as "Penny back – Silver Dime front?"

Before I even looked at the illustration, my eyebrows went up, wondering if the question mark at the end of the description meant "I don't know what it is, there are no guarantees as to accurate description, but bid on it anyway!"

After I saw the illustrations of the obverse and reverse and concluded immediately that this could not be a genuine Royal Canadian Mint error, I looked at the illustration of the two-by-two holder, shown in Figure 2. It states: "One side 1955 penny other side look like silver dime."

Figure 2. The two-by-two holder states 'other side look like silver dime,' but there is no reference to the slashes.

No reference is made to the two deep gouges on the reverse. Because this error is an obvious post-mint production, I decided to check the website's rules and regulations about returns.

Under "Reviewing your bids," it states: "All items are sold as is, where is, with all faults."

Under "Conditions of items sold," it states, in part: "Our best efforts are made to represent all items accurately in descriptions and photographs, all descriptions believed accurate but not warranted; however, all items are ultimately sold on an 'as is, where is' basis, with all faults.

"Any references to items being sold with regards to signatures/autographs, description genuineness, authorship, age, rarity, provenance, condition, significance, source, origin, etc. are statements of opinion only.

"The bidder accepts full responsibility for determining the value and/or authenticity of the merchandise being sold. We strongly encourage all bidders to personally inspect and verify the condition of each item during the scheduled preview times. By placing a bid, the bidder signifies that they have examined the items to their satisfaction, or that they have chosen not to personally examine them."

As if the above is not enough, the rules also include the following addition: "CLAIMS: No claims regarding goods purchased will be allowed. Bidders are reminded that all goods are sold on an 'as is, where is' basis, with all faults."

On the assumption that neither Hibid nor McLean Auctions will waive these rules for any reason, I know I won't be bidding. There appears to be little wiggle room for returns, even though listings such as this example offer nothing more than a coin with postmint damage.

It is unfortunate how this auction went, considering there are no returns allowed. When I last accessed this lot, bidding was still open. It had received 57 offers, bringing it up to $156, as seen in Figure 3. The listing stated that the final bid amount had not been updated.

The auction house does not explain the cause of the silver-coloured obverse (left) or the two slashes on the reverse (right).

If the successful bidder sends the coin to Canadian Coin Certification Service (CCCS) or one of the four toptier U.S. authenticators and it agrees that it is a genuine mint error, I will pay the cost involved.

On the assumption that McLean Auctions values its reputation and is willing to send a scan of the listing to CCCS, I offer the same reimbursement. However, with the deal comes this proviso: If CCCS rules that it is not genuine, the successful bidder may return the coin to the auction house for a full credit. I don't think that this course of action is unfair, regardless of what the rules state, for fairness and reputation.

1977 FIVE CENTS STRUCK THROUGH GREASE

An eBay listing by "briapeas-4" of Sarnia, Ont., carries a heading of: "Beautiful Example of 1977 Canadian Nickel STRUCK THROUGH GREASE MINT ERROR."

I wonder if the seller has figured out how a coin can be fully struck through grease on both sides.

If grease was the culprit, just how much was required to cover the whole surface of both the upper and lower dies, that is, both the incused cavities as well as the high part of the dies?

Figure 4. The seller states that this coin was struck through grease on both sides to cause the ripple effect.

Wouldn't you think that most of the grease would wind up in the cavity of the die? Would the pressure of the dies against the blank shift the grease from the cavity to the high points in that split second so the pitting on the coin is equal on both the raised design and the field as can be seen in Figure 5?

Figure 5. Could grease create this pattern on both the incused Queen and the raised field in the die?

I also wonder how exactly all that grease stuck to the upper die or, alternatively, sat on the top of the blank planchet.

The grading is listed simply as "Circulated." The write-up states: "The grade and condition stated is my judgment based on over 35 years of coin collecting experience."

What? It took 35 years of experience to figure out that the coin is circulated?

I realize that the seller's information on all of his listings is repetitive, but it takes only a minute to change the wording to personalize each lot, especially when you are asking $125 plus $14.99 shipping.

He also includes the following wording: "Super ASSET for your collection." Maybe he made a mistake in the spelling and really meant "Super ACID for your collection."

Figure 6. How did grease manage to cover the high and incused parts all over the dies on both sides?

1990 FIVE-CENT STRUCK-THROUGH

A listing by "semdeals" of Moncton, N.B., is for a "Major Error Coin – Canadian Nickel 5 Cents – Strange Odd Mistake Coin."

This coin looks similar to the previous listing and begs the same questions about grease winding up on both the high and low points of the dies and both sides of the coin.

According to the listing, it was $59 originally, but when it didn't sell, the following was added in the relisting "You save: $17.70 (30% off)," dropping the price down to $41.30.

Every time I see such a listing, I wonder why the seller doesn't start at double the asking price and then offer 60 per cent off. I mean, if the fictitious price for a phoney error is an invention in the owner's mind, why not make the price so much more attractive by offering a deep discount?

Or else do the hobby a favour and educate yourself and don't list it in the first place.

As is the case in many listings, the seller does not state how this error could have occurred. If the owner knew, he would not call it a "Strange Odd Mistake."

In my opinion, it is extremely unlikely that grease was the cause in both of the above.

RULES

this "mistake."

RULES ON ETSY

Like the coin in Figure 4, acid was the likely cause of

If you review the rules on the Etsy site, you will see that the following items are prohibited or restricted on the site: alcohol, tobacco, drugs and drug paraphernalia, animal products, human remains, hazardous materials, weapons, hate items, illegal items, pornography and mature content, international regulated items (i.e. copyrighted knock-offs) and items that promote, support or glorify violence.

All very good and noble, but where is theft by deceit or dishonesty and obvious fraud in description?

As far as eBay is concerned, its website states, in part, that when the item received by the buyer doesn't match the listing, sellers are required to deliver the item as it was described in the listing.

If it was that simple, I can see buyers contacting eBay for a lot of refunds, even when the seller states that returns are not accepted. But of course there are strings attached, such as how you paid for the item in the first place, time limits, et cetera. You can go to eBay and read the long rules and regulations for yourself. Incidentally, who does eBay employ to verify that the item was not described correctly?

Answer: Nobody, because it is purely a site to facilitate buyers and sellers getting together.

I would love to hear from you about how you have been treated, or rather mistreated, by some of the auction sites. As well, what would you like to see changed?

Your comments of what you think and how you feel about providing better protection before you buy or bid on a lot are solicited.

now be given or worn as a way to spark important conversations on mental health."

Meant to spark dialogue, the new medal can be worn or given to someone else to show your willingness to talk about mental health.

The donations from the medal's sale will go towards Kids Help Phone's youth-focused mental health programs.

"Through this deeply thought out symbol of support, we will continue to drive awareness towards important mental health conversations and actions," said Kids Help Phone President and CEO Katherine Hay. "Both youth and adults have been deeply impacted by the unprecedented challenges faced because of the COVID-19 pandemic, particularly with their mental health. By rallying as a staff team and inspiring a nation, the Mint's generous contributions from this medal will not only help open up the dialogue about mental health but also help Kids Help Phone continue to break down barriers and provide e-mental health solutions for youth and adults across Canada while driving transformational change in e-mental health solutions."

MENTAL HEALTH MEDAL DESIGN

Designed by the Mint's inhouse artists, the 2022-dated mental health medal holds various meanings.

One side uses negative and positive space to present two overlapping silhouettes. The person on the left is opening up about their struggles while the one on the right is actively listening. The triangles above their heads indicate their state of well-being: the unorganized triangles represent fragmented thoughts or a state of distress while the organized pattern suggests a healthier state of mind (and the missing triangles, according to the Mint, "are a reminder that there is no such thing as 'perfect' mental health").

The medal's other side features a stylized maple leaf. This quintessentially Canadian symbol represents the country's strong national spirit and willingness to help one other through difficult times like the pandemic. This concept is reinforced by the positioning of the words "santé mentale / mental health," which emulate the veins of the maple leaf as a reminder about mental health's critical role in overall wellbeing.

The plain-edged medal weighs 6.04 grams with a 22.25-millimetre diameter.

Like last year's recognition medal, each mental health medal comes with a magnet attachment so it can be worn on either side. It's packaged with the magnet in a gift card folder enclosed in a clear plastic pouch.

To maximize its fundraising potential, the Mint also concentrated its available resources to make the medal – from spare materials to employees volunteering to package it.

"When it comes to dealing with mental health issues, the societal evolution from 'just shake it off' and 'get over it' to 'it's okay to not be okay' has been very heartening to witness," said Minka Singh, the Mint's product management co-ordinator and mental health ambassador. "Asking for help is no longer seen as a weakness. This is crucial because healing from the collective trauma that we have gone through during this pandemic will necessitate significant recovery. As the founder of the Mint's Mental Health Working Group, I feel this medal embodies the sentiments that we're all in this together, that help is there when we need it, and that we're going to get each other through this."

MENTAL HEALTH IN CANADA

While the phrases "mental health" and "mental illness" are often used interchangeably, they have different meanings, according to the Canadian Mental Health Association (CMHA).

"'Mental health' is a concept similar to 'physical health': it refers to a state of well-being. Mental health includes our emotions, feelings of connection to others, our thoughts and feelings, and being able to manage life's highs and lows," according to the CMHA website. "The presence or absence of a mental illness is not a predictor of mental health; someone without a mental illness could have poor mental health, just as a person with a mental illness could have excellent mental health."

The CMHA reports in any given year, one in five people in Canada "personally experience a mental health problem or illness." By age 40, about 50 per cent of the population will have or have had a mental illness.

Overall, one in three Canadians will be affected by mental illness in their lifetime, according to a 2021 report from the Public Health Agency of Canada, which this June announced a $9.275 million investment in 57 distress centres across Canada.

The planned funding is part of a mental health investment through the fall 2020 economic statement, which provided $93 million in overall funding to support mental health initiatives.

Of that, $43 million was earmarked to expand the Wellness Together Canada (WTC) portal, which provides virtual mental health and substance use support regardless of age or location in Canada. The portal, of which Kids Help Phone is one of three partners, has since been accessed by nearly two million Canadians, "providing free and confidential access to live support, direct crisis counselling and helpful mental health and substance use resources," according to a statement from Prime Minister Justin Trudeau on Oct. 10, which is World Mental Health Day.

When it comes to young Canadians, about 20 per cent of the country's youth are affected by a mental illness or disorder, according to a 2020 Canadian Institute for Health Information report.

The Mental Health Commission of Canada, funded by Health Canada, has found only one in five Canadian children receive "appropriate" mental health services.

Since its 1989 founding, Kids Help Phone has expanded into online and telephone counselling and volunteer-led textbased support in both English and French for children across the country. Last year, the organization made more than 4.6 million connections with young people - more than double the communications received in 2019, the year before the pandemic began. Demand for service increased by 112 per cent in March 2020, the first month of the pandemic, compared to the previous year. *

In the Quebec-based auctioneer's RCNA sale, held Aug. 28, an 1888 cent in PCGS MS-66 Red sold for $6,545; a 1921 cent in ICCS MS-65 Red was hammered down at $7,145; and a 1951 cent in ICCS MS-66 Red sold for $4,462

At the Nov. 6 Prominence V sale, a 1904 cent in ICCS MS-66 Red, ex. Landon, sold for $2,380, and a second example, also ex. Landon, fetched $2,261. A 1905 cent in ICCS MS-66 Red, ex. Landon, slipped through the cracks at $1,547, although not as fully red as the two 1904 cents. A 1936 Dot cent in PCGS Specimen-65 Red and Brown, formerly of the George Cook collection, was hammered down for $446,600. A 1937 cent in ICCS MS-66 Red hit $773; a brass 1937 DC-19 trial strike in ICCS SP-66 sold for $5,950; a 1938 cent in ICCS MS-66 Red hit $833; a 1940 cent in ICCS MS-66 Red reached $416; a 1951 cent in ICCS MS-66 Red sold for $4,993; a 1952 cent in ICCS MS-66 Red fetched $881; a 1953 NSF cent in ICCS MS-66 Red sold for $822; a 1954 SF Hanging 4 cent in ICCS MS-66 hit $1,785; a 1961 Hanging 1 cent in ICCS MS-66 Red sold for $833; a 1962 Harp cent in ICCS MS-66 Red sold for $654; and a 2006P non-magnetic cent in ICCS MS-65 was hammered down for $2,380.

In the issue when one-cent coin valuations were last reviewed, I commented, "We continue to look at MS-66 prices for the George VI dates, for possible upward revisions, but I need more sales results before changes occur." Well, we have had more sales results and they have been quite strong. This has led to upward valuation revisions for many dates in MS-66. I would venture to say that the majority of outstanding results have been in both large cents and small cents graded MS-66, and displaying full red lustre. Ten or 15 years ago, full red MS-65 cents were bringing record prices. While scarce and rare coins in this grade are still very strong, MS-66 has become the new MS-65.

I have also adjusted, upwards, the 1858 cent with coinage axis, in Fine condition. Additionally, I have raised the valuation for the 1954 NSF cent, in all grades. This coin continues to exhibit strong demand, with higher prices achieved in auction. As a side note, an example of this Prooflike only issue was recently certified by ICCS as EF-40. It is only the second circulated example I have seen.

I recently had an inquiry about non-magnetic 2010 and 2011 small cents. They had not been included in Trends, but I have added them to the listings as of this issue. In the meantime, as I write this, we are excitedly getting ready to travel to Montreal for Nuphilex. After a robust Torex show, we hope that Nuphilex is just as busy.

The law is essentially the same across the country with two important exceptions – Ontario and Québec.

"Although the Ontario Heritage Act specifies that all archaeological objects taken without the authority of a licence are subject to seizure, it does not specify to whom the finds belong," adds the Parks Canada website. "Generally, at Common Law a find on or in land belongs to the landowner, except when the find is in a 'public place' (e.g., on a road), whereupon it belongs to the finder. When the original ('true') owner of the found item (or his/her heirs) are ascertainable, it belongs to them."

Québec's legislation features further intricacies.

"If the lands (on which the find was made) were public lands as of 1972 or later, then the find belongs to the provincial Crown," reads the Parks Canada website. "However, if these have been private lands since at least 1972, then ownership of the find is governed by the Quebec Civil Code, in the case of anything which is a 'buried or hidden thing of which no one can prove himself owner, and which is discovered by chance.' Such discoveries, assuming that they have any value, are covered by the 'treasure' provisions of the Code (article 938), that is, the find belongs to the landowner if it is the landowner who discovered it; if the finder is not the landowner, the find (or its value) is split half and half between them." *
